"He who has never learned to obey cannot be a good commander" Aristotle

Have you ever been frustrated because your team doesn't seem to be achieving the results they should be? • Are you always a little behind target or desperately scrambling for ways to meet your targets in time? • Are you ever putting out fires because there is insufficient communication, collaboration or connection in your team? • Is the leader of the team over-burdened or micro-managing so that there is very little commitment to projects or goals that the team needs to obtain or complete? • Is accountability a problem within the team or indeed to the tasks the team are responsible for? • Do you ever feel like you don't actually get to have a say and can you at times feel disheartened or demotivated by how you as a person doesn't seem to matter? •

If you have answered yes or maybe to any of the above questions, your team may be dysfunctional and therefore not in a position to win desired results as times get tougher and business success gets more complicated.
